Nutrition Nuggets

Peel Appeal

Go ahead and put your peeler in the back of the drawer because many of your favorite fruits are even better for you with the peel. The protective skin of fruits (and veggies) is packed with antioxidants and nutrients that the inner-portion may not include. Some of these peels may surprise you (kiwi?!?!), but if you want to truly reap all of the benefits that fruits have to offer, try to include the peel, even in small amounts. Here are five examples of fruits that have nutritionally packed-peels. So before you throw away the skin on your next apple, think about what you'll be tossing out.

 Always remember to wash your produce thoroughly before enjoying it.*

- Eggplant - There are more than 200 milligrams of muscle-cramp-preventing potassium, 13 milligrams of immunity-building magnesium, and 3 grams of heart-healthy fiber in the skin of these purple powerhouses. Plus, the skin contains about 300 milligrams of the antioxidant nasunin, which may prevent brain-cell damage.
- Kiwi - Who knew that the fuzzy peel of the kiwi was edible? Although it may not sound particularly appetizing, the peel has chemical compounds that have been found to fight bugs like staph and E. coli. If you'd rather not bite into the fuzz, try blending the entire fruit into a smoothie.
- Cucumber - Yes, the cucumber is a fruit! The peel is made of silica, which is a building block of skin because of its collagen content. Cukes are also 90% water, which makes them an excellent source of natural hydration. So toss some into your next salad or enjoy them with dips or hummus - just remember to include the skin!
- Apple - There is truth to the old adage, "an apple a day keeps the doctor away" - but that daily apple needs to include the skin! The crunchy peel packs up to 87% more cancer-fighting phytochemicals than the inside.
- Orange - The peel on the famous fruit of the Sunshine State contains d-limonene, a defender against UV rays. Studies indicate that eating one teaspoon of orange peel a week may reduce skin cancer. Rather than just biting into the rind, try adding orange peel zest to salads, fish, or chicken dishes.

*Nutrition Nuggets is intended to provide information and ideas on health and nutrition topics. Please remember that any major changes in lifestyle or diet should first be discussed with your physician.

Did You Know?

Potatoes are packed with vitamins and minerals but most of the good stuff is found just under the skin.
